Flood Inundation Maps Now Available In 25 Public Libraries

NASHVILLE, TENN. (February 13, 2007) – The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers added the Madison Branch and the Edmondson Pike Public Libraries yesterday to the list of those downstream from Wolf Creek Dam that contain Inundation Maps to bring the total to 25 Libraries where flood inundation maps may be viewed by the public. The mapping was developed to provide a priority planning tool for local Emergency Managers in the unlikely event of a dam failure at Wolf Creek, Russell County, Ky. The maps show estimates of flooded areas based on a range of failure scenarios. These maps show consequences of failure, not probability of failure.

These inundations maps include sensitive information that could be used by those who want to harm the public. Under normal circumstances, the Corps does not release inundation maps.

In the special circumstances of Wolf Creek Dam, however, the public's need for knowledge and understanding of the situation partly outweighs the need for security.

Public safety is paramount while the Corps of Engineers is implementing a range of operational measures at Wolf Creek Dam to reduce the likelihood of failure and resulting flooding downstream. Repair work began this year in January and will continue perhaps for the next seven years.

Locations of Libraries will be posted online at www.lrn.usace.army.mil and updated as they are confirmed. The public may now view maps at libraries listed below.
